HONGKONG, SEPTEMBER 24, 1867.

THE finality of a diplomatic career in Cluna or Japan is the explanation of a good dea which we have to deploye in the management of British interests at Pelin. When a man has, like Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, spent his life in the consular service in China, reaching the goal of his ambition at last by being ap-340 feet. of European diplomacy, and would find himself completely out of his element at a westorn . few years only. Whenever a Minister Plenipotentiary at Pekin has been nothing else but a China diplomate all his life, he has no change of being anything else, and when he goes home he must make up his mind to consider himself shelved. No man likes to be shelved, and public men least of all, and it is not surprising therefore that under these circumstances the British representative at Pekin should devote his energies mainly to the task of keeping himself where he is, a result which he is much more likely! complish by keeping on good terms with the The Workshops on the Premises, both at Chinese and saving the Home Government questions, than by heartily espousing the ining his mission. The real way out of the difficulty would be to appoint new men altocomplete delusion to suppose a knowledge of Chinese a necessary qualification for a British Minister. It is to be questioned whether it is even desirable, inasmuch as it is ture to carry with it qualifications which are the auggest themselves to everyone in this colony. The Company's Stores will (when required) but those exceptions, though they may speak within the English atmosphere of this community, while a Chinese-speaking Minister calculably greater degree to Chinese and in a proportionately smaller degree to English influences. The European diplomatist coming out fresh from anvigorating Western politics; would be infinitely, better adopted to follow up the advantages we have already gained in constantly overwhelmed with the idea of the wonderful progress we have made. He would be altogether more likely to harmonise with the English communities and immeasurably more likely to leave his mark upon the history of British relations with China, than the man who thinks that he and his Chinese friends which offer every facility for the DOCKING have done quite enough for British trade al-legates seized with almority the grateful apportunity to buit and bully their more regularlyconstituted representatives. For the first time in modern constitutional ristory, members of the House of Commons seard their ar guments refuted, their statements lisoredited, their anologies decided by an impromptn conclove sitting in their own Tearound. Striking as the whole affair was to the moderate. Apply to spectator at the time, it must have been even more prognant of suggestions. Was not the nitting itself a breach of order? If so, how could it be punished? A clever piece of inpertinence on the part of a forward schoolboy muy be checked by the master's "I'll have you! florged sir!" But what reply could the cowed and haited momber who had thoughtlessly pranamed to stand up for voting-papers and threecornered constituoncies venture to offer to his provincial censor, whose sloquence gathered length and strength from the cenius of the place? Who would dare to call him to order, of recommend him to sit down! Imagine the Gracebi of manufacturing municipalities hearing themselves talk and talk down real members of Parliament in the House of Commons itself? Imagine a Imcraft, with scornful snear, deriding the useless encumbrance of an aristocracy, or an Odger, with a "nice derangement ITHE BUSINESS PREMISES, consisting of epituphs." predicting the speedy downfull of a baughty Perrage, and all this under the very ly mempied by Messra, Rerwolms & Co. wing and wand of the Serjeant-at-Arms!
